Living in a Complex

Islam as a religion places great importance on noble mannerism and etiquette. We find the Quran and Ahadith replete with encouragement towards imbibing the best of character in our lives regardless of whom we interact with.

Rasulullah ﷺ has stated, “Piety is noble character.” (Muslim)

Sayyiduna Amr bin Al-Aas رضي الله عنه has reported, “Rasulullah ﷺ was not vulgar and rude, nor was he harsh and indecent. He ﷺ used to say, “From the best of you are those with the most excellent manners.” (Bukhari)

With current real estate trends, many Muslims live in complexes with a variety of people as their neighbours. In these environments, our display of moral ethics, respect and kindness becomes more important.

Global media constantly paints a very negative image of Islam. In our dealings with others, we either challenge this image or cement it in their minds.

In being good neighbours and respecting the rules of the complexes and buildings that we reside in, we not only enhance our own image as upright individuals but also the image of Islam.
